West Valley City Celebrates 35 Years

The year was 1980. Ronald Reagan was president, Blondie's "Call Me" topped charts, the video game Pac-Man made its way to arcades and out of the union of the farming communities of Hunter and Granger, West Valley City was born.

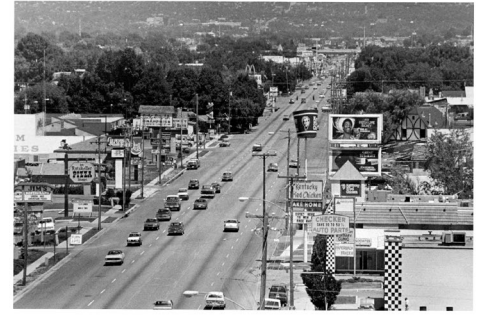

This totally tubular city has gone on to become the second largest city in the state featuring a rad location and awesome amenities and services. This July, as we honor our 35th year of incorporation, West Valley City is celebrating 80's style.

Dudes and dudettes, book it over to www.wvc-ut.gov. We're stoked to announce that the city's website has gone retro to the max to celebrate an amazing 35 years!

And, if you want to see something really rad, check out the total bodaciousness of our "then and now" photos. We took actual, like, photos from the 80's and recreated them, in some cases using the same West Valley City employee that was in the original photo. Trust us, they're like, totally choice'

The "then and now" photos include WVCFD Captain Lee Monsen over seeing work done in 1980 and in a re-creation of the photo, still serving WVC today, (albeit with a little more silver on top of his head.) Another photo features WVCPCD Officer Tom McLachlan visiting with a group of children in WVC. The re-created version features Tom's own son, Kevin McLachlan, now a WVCPCD officer himself, visiting with a group of children, two of whom are Tom McLachlan's grandchildren. And a recreated shot taken from one of our WVCFD ladder trucks looking down 3500 South shows incredible changes to area. (Bangerter Highway didn't even exist yet!)

Celebrate with us as we look back at 35 wonderful years as a city. Check out our Facebook page for more "then and now" photos and share your memories. Here's to another great 35 years!

An election will be held this year for three West Valley City Council seats:
